

The Olio.

NATURE

BY R. C. WATERSTON.

I love thee, Nature—love thee well—
In sunny nook and twilight dell,
Where larks and bees and blossoms dwell,
And leaves and flowers;
And winds in low sweet voices tell,
Of happy hours.

I love thy clear and running streams,
Which mildly flash with silver gleams,
Or darkly lie, like shadow dreams,
To bless the sight;
While every wave with beauty teems,
And smiles delight.

I love thy forest, deep and lone,
Where twilight shades are ever thrown,
And murmuring winds with solemn tone,
Go slowly by,
Sending a peal like ocean moan,
Along the sky.

I love to watch at close of day,
The heavens in splendor melt away,
From radiant gold to silver gray,
As sinks the sun;
While stars upon their trackless way,
Come on by one.

I love I know not which the best,
The little wood-bird in its nest,
The wave that mirrors in its breast
The landscape true,
Or the sweet flower by winds caressed,
And bathed in dew.

They are all to my bosom dear,
They all God's messengers appear!
Preludes to songs that spirits hear!
Mute prophecies!
Paint types of a resplendent sphere
Beyond the skies!

The clouds—the mist—the sunny air—
All that is beautiful and fair,
Beneath, around and every where,
Were sent in love,
And some eternal truth declare
From heaven above!

LECTURE AGAINST TEMPERANCE.

Delivered from the top of an empty Liquor Cask, before the honorable Association of Bunglers.

FELLERS.—I spect most of you have heard of this here cruel impiety and willanous bamboozlement they call the Temperance Reform, got up to prevent decent poor folks from enjoying themselves in a rational and innocent way, that is, to take licker when they feels inclined to it. But may be, some of you don't know that the temperance chaps make their brags that they've licked us out, and that we hant got a word to say for ourselves. Now, that's a most owacious mistake: we've got lots of arguments and rashation on our side, and we've got genius and sperit enough to take our own part, I guess when it comes to the tussel. I think myself good enough for any six of the cold water orators, and I can give 'em their biters I think, when I go at it in earnest. I'll let them know that I've tuck the field, and its orful to think how pannicky they'll feel, when they see me come out agin 'em. I hope the Temperance Assosiation won't dissolve right away, for I want an opportunity of walking right into 'em, like a pig into a turnip patch, and if there's a splinter of 'em left at the end of six weeks from this time—bust me!

I hope I needn't say, my werry respectable audience, that I'm in favor of every man, woman, and child's having their grog in due season; that is six or eight times aday, or oftener, if the delicacy of their constitutions requires more stimulus. What harm will come out? Won't it make 'em happy? And aint happiness "our being's end and aim," as Mr. Murray says, in the English Reader? Suppose a man's got no home and is cold, he takes a drink and feels comfortable. He lays down on the bricks, and don't know they aint feathers. "Suppose he's friz to death, why he don't know what hurts him; he goes happy, and I guess he never feels cold afterwards."

Them temperance fellers say, licker costs us a heap of money—that's a mulluncolly truth—it costs a confounded site more than it oughter cost. I go agin high prices myself. The tavern-keepers want to make werry unreasonable profits, and its rite enuff to make 'em ashamed of the extorsionating propenserty. There's a gentleman of my acquaintance in St. Mary's street, what sells a werry good glass of grog for a penny, and he allows that he can make a werry decent living at that. The reason why he can sell so low, is that he's got no license. That license law is what raises the price of licker, my respectable audience; its a sort of contrivance by which the public goes partners with the licker sellers, and comes in for a good slice of the profits. They say it helps to support government. Confound government. What do respectable people want with government. That's another impiety. If government can't be supported without a tax on people's grog, it oughter be choked. Why do they tax some people's drink and not others? Why don't they put a tax on pumps and hydrops, so that them as has no better sense than to prefer cold water to grog may pay their part of the rekkonin'?

Now I ax you fellers, whos' the best citizen, him as supports government, or him as doesn't? Why, him as does, in course. We supports government, fellers—every man as drinks grog supports government.—That is, if he likers at a licensed house.—Every blessed drop of licker he swallows there is taxed to pay the salary of some of them great big-bugs. "Suppose we was to quit drinking, why government must fall, it couldn't help it, no how. That's the werry reason I drinks. I don't like grog—I mortally hates it; if I followed my own inclination, I'd rather drink buttermilk, or ginger pop, or soder water. But I likers for the good of my country, to set an example of patriotism and virtus self denial to the risin generation."

"Suppose we was vindictive or malishus, couldn't we show our spite? Well, I rather guess we could. "Suppose we was to swear off, 'cos government won't take our part, and confine them temperance fellers in the penitentiary, where they oughter be. Why, the whole nashun would go to smashers right away. Government would be cut out of the share of the profits of the licker business, and down it would go, just like I would if this here barrel I'm a standing on was stuv in. The taverns couldn't pay their license, the stilleries would be stopt, the farmers couldn't sell their grain, and the whole universal world would be in a state of stagnation."

tion. But we're too ginnerus to show our spite in that way—we puts up with everything, just like marters. Case why? If the present generation don't do us justice, another will. That's our comfort.

Fellers! got your reeds and straws ready. The feller they sot to watch them barrels is gon asleep. The bugs is all open, so we'll take a suck and then go to sleep ourselves, like innersent babies, so we will. I'll deliver my sekund lecture shortly. I'm much obledged for your pashunt attention. You've sucked in my instruction, and now let's suck in some of old Scivelback's brandy. Out with sucking instruments, fellers, and all to business.

LUCY LEE, THE LITTLE TEMPERANCE REFORMER.—Lucy was accustomed to attend the temperance meeting. She pited poor drunkards, and she would frequently pray for them, and often did she wish to do something to reform them. One night, at the close of the meeting, she went forward to the chairman, and said, "I am a poor little girl, but I wish to do something for the drunkard; can I be of any use, sir?" "O yes, my dear," said the good man, "here is a paper, which you can take and go about with, to get names for the Society." Little Lucy took the paper, made a graceful curtsy, and went away with a rejoicing heart. Lucy had a drunken father. He was wont to come home at midnight, blind and mad with drink, and he would then beat her mother, and kick the chairs and stools about the house. That very evening that Lucy got the paper, he went home swearing and raging in a fit of drunkenness. Trembling and grieved, she lifted up her heart to God in prayer for her father. The next morning, when her father was sober, she presented the paper to him, and asked him in an affectionate manner, to sign it. He became enraged, swore and stamped with his feet, struck his own sweet daughter a blow with his hand, which laid her on the floor. It was a cruel action, but Lucy bore it meekly, and quietly rose up, lifted her papers, and went out of her father's presence.

Lucy was no way discouraged. He became ashamed of his conduct, and determined to abstain. He did so for several weeks, without saying any thing; but Lucy and her mother spoke of it to each other, and were glad. At length one day when Lucy came in with the paper, he called her, took her on knee, and said to her, "Well, dear, how many have now signed your papers?" She replied, "We will count and see, papa." When they had done so, he said, "You have just one hundred and nineteen." She looked up into his face with a smile of resistless sweetness; it was a smile of innocence, tenderness and affection. She then put her arm round his neck, and as the tear trickled down her rosy cheek, she kissed him, and again asked him to sign. The drunkard who had been for twenty years a victim, could not resist, he signed.—[Juvenile Temperance Messenger.]

ANECDOTE OF JEROME BONAPARTE.—He was one day, he said, absolutely in want of twenty-five louis, his purse being empty, and thought General Murat, governor of Paris, and who was very fond of him, often assisted him with his; but this time the latter resourse failed him; and the quarter's allowance which he received from the consul had been spent in advance. What was he to do! To whom address himself? To his other brothers! They were absent. Joseph and Louis commanded regiments at a distance; Lucien was on an embassy to Lisbon or Madrid. As to his mother, she could not see any reason for giving money to a young scapegrace like him, whom she loved tenderly, but whose morals she was more anxious for than his prodigality. What could he think of! It came into his head to pay a visit to a holy man, his uncle Fesch (become a cardinal). He presents himself, and is well received by this worthy relation, at whose house a numerous party is assembled. He is invited to dinner; after dinner they pass into the saloon to take coffee. At this moment Jerome watches the cardinal entering another room; he follows him thither, draws into a corner this dear uncle, whom he had already so often wheedled out of money, and requests the same favor again; but the other is immovable, and refused flatly. Cardinal Fesch, it was well known, was always a great lover of pictures; now the room in which they were formed the commencement of his fine gallery, which has become so remarkable for its collection of the masterpieces of all the schools. When Jerome heard this positive refusal, he turned abruptly round, "See!" said he, "there is a rascal who seems to be laughing at the affront I have received. I will be revenged." At the same time he draws his sabre, and directs the point against the face of a fine old man, painted by Van Dyck, whose eyes he threatened to cut out. It may be imagined what a fright the cardinal was in at seeing him ready to sacrifice a masterpiece; he attempts to stave his arm; but the young man will not hear reason, till the twenty-five louis have been promised him. The uncle capitulates, peace is made, and they embrace.—[Mademoiselle Cochelet.]

THE GOOD WIFE.—How much of this world's happiness and prosperity is contained in the compass of these two short words! Her influence is immense. The power of a wife, for good or evil, is altogether irresistible. Home must be the seat of happiness, or it must be for ever unknown. A good wife is to a man wisdom, and courage, and strength, and hope, and endurance; a bad one is confusion, weakness, discomfiture, and despair. No condition is hopeless when the wife possesses firmness, decision, energy, and economy. There is no outward prosperity which can counteract indolence, folly, and extravagance at home. No spirit can long resist bad domestic influence. Man is strong, but his heart is not adamant. He delights in enterprise and action; but to sustain him, he needs a tranquil mind and a whole heart. He expends his whole moral force in the conflicts of the world. His feelings are lacerated to the utmost point of endurance by perpetual collisions and disappointments. To recover his equanimity and composure, home must be to him a place of repose, of peace, of cheerfulness, of comfort; and his soul renews its strength, and again goes forth with fresh vigor to encounter the labor and troubles of the world. But if at home he finds no rest, and there is met with bad temper, selfishness, or gloom, or is assailed by discontent, complaint, and reproaches, the heart breaks, the spirits are crushed, hope vanishes, and the man sinks into total despair.
